This Special Issue aims to attract contributions on all aspects of the chemistry and bioactivity of essential oils, as well as on new methodologies for their isolation. Still there is a challenge to further explore the range of their biological effects and their potential applications in medicine and agriculture among others.

In this review, we have summarized the current knowledge on FM phytochemistry and its bioactivity activities. The bioactive compounds in FM include both lipid and water-soluble components. More than 90% of the essential components of FM species are terpenoids, including monoterpenes and sesquiterpenes.
