

examples of carbon adsorber pdf

The carbon adsorber has two identical beds, one adsorbing while the other is desorbing on a 15-minute cycle. Carbon bed regeneration is accomplished with a combination of high vacuum and purge air stripping which removes previously adsorbed gasoline vapor from the carbon and restores the carbon's ability to adsorb vapor during the next cycle.

involved in adsorber models, which are covered in the next sections. In addition, though not strictly a property, cost is involved in every design decision. Frequently, rough values of density or a range of nominal values are available from the vendor. Likewise, cost data are available as a function of quantity and required pretreatment, if any.

An industrial wastewater contains 10 mg/L chlorophenol, and is going to be treated by carbon adsorption. 90% removal is desired. The wastewater is discharged at a rate of 0.1 MGD.

gas stream, a carbon usage prediction can be made. Activated Carbon Adsorption for Treatment of VOC Emissions 3 TRICHLOROETHYLENE ISOTHERM FIGURE II DESIGN CONSIDERATIONS Activated carbons used in the air pollution control field are normally supplied in a granular form with a particle size ranging from 1 to 5 millimeters.

ACTIVATED CARBON ADSORPTION FOR TREATMENT OF VOC

For example, approximately 3 to 5 percent of organics adsorbed on virgin activated carbon is either chemisorbed or very strongly physically adsorbed and, for all intents, cannot be desorbed during regeneration.[1]
