Explanations > Trust > Four Types of Justice. Distributive | Procedural | Restorative | Retributive | So what? There are four types of justice that people can seek when they have been wronged. Distributive justice. Distributive justice, also known as economic justice, is about fairness in what people receive, from goods to attention. Its roots are in social order and it is at the roots of socialism, where equality is a fundamental principle.

As the form of autonomy that should provide the telos of social justice is that of reciprocal recognition, the moral language used is that of recognition. The central conceptual and normative element of Pereira's critical theory is taken from Honneth's theory of recognition. An initial comment should be made on this point.

In contrast to Forms, particulars are complex, changeable, and imperfect. These important differences suggest that the way Forms and particulars exist is different, and that the existence of the Forms is superior: they are in a way that particulars are not. Forms exist independently, but particulars only exist through participating in the Forms.

Justice is the concept of cardinal virtues, of which it is one. Metaphysical justice has often been associated with concepts of fate, reincarnation or Divine Providence, i.e., with a life in accordance with a cosmic plan. The association of justice with fairness is thus historically and culturally inalienable.
