Mission creep is the expansion of a project or mission beyond its original goals, often after initial successes. Mission creep is usually considered undesirable due to the dangerous path of each success breeding more ambitious attempts, stopping only when a final, often catastrophic, failure occurs.

Mission creep - Wikipedia

Scope creep (also called requirement creep, or kitchen sink syndrome) in project management refers to changes, continuous or uncontrolled growth in a project's scope, at any point after the project begins. This can occur when the scope of a project is not properly defined, documented, or controlled. It is generally considered harmful. It is related to but distinct from feature creep, because ...

- Scope creep. If you're a project manager, that phrase makes you cringe, because scope creep can derail your project faster than you can say, Houston, we have a problem. So you need to know why scope creep happens and what you can do about it. Scope creep thrives in the gap between what the customer expects and what the project delivers. That word expect is key.
